
Active girls at Wembley for football prize

Sporty schoolgirls from Stratford were treated to a trip to Wembley Stadium to watch England's women footballers take on historic rivals Germany.

The 20 girls from Stratford School Academy (SSA) went there on November 23 as part of the school's Get Girls into Sport project, and as a reward for being the school's most physically active students.

Cassandra Till, head of house and PE teacher at SSA, said: "An inspiring day watching world class sports women, with the next generation of sports women."

SSA's PE department is trying to get more girl students playing competitive sport, by offering a range of sports to choose from on it's extra-curricular timetable.

The school hopes this will mean there will be no reason why every girl cannot be involved in some form of physical activity at least once a week.

The lucky 20 were chosen to see the International Women's Football match as they had attended the highest number of extra-curricular sporting clubs over the last month.
